Love and JL Josie Bar Bank over $9,000 at Christmas In Dixie

This past weekend at the Christmas In Dixie Barrel Race in Jackson, MS, a familiar duo topped the Average, JL Josie Bar and Nicole Love. The pair won both the Friday and Saturday Open on their way to the Average Championship and $9,046 in earnings for the weekend. Josie and Love team up to win big checks week after week so we thought it would be fun to catch up with them for a few questions.

BRR: Can you walk us through your runs at the Christmas In Dixie Barrel Race?

Love: The first run it was just real smooth. She got by the first barrel a little and I didn't think she was going to clock the way she did. She was just so smooth and she has such a big stride. Her 2nd and 3rd barrel were very smooth and she was really honest. The second run it was very fast, very sharp. She smoked her first barrel and she couldn't have been better, she hit all her spots just right. She felt like her old self. To me it was one of her perfect runs that she puts together. The last run of the weekend she had ground trouble at the first barrel and I just worried about getting a clean run to stay in the average.

BRR: Tell us about your horse. Any funny quirks? Any special things she likes or dislikes?

Love: She does not like swinging ropes. We don't do those at all! If we go to a rodeo she has to stay in the trailer until we run if there are ropes around. She prefers women over and men except her vet Dr. Ford! She doesn't let just anyone catch her when she's turned out. She is very selective of her company, she likes who she likes. She is a very personable, sweet, quiet mare but she has her quirks.

BRR: You and JL Josie Bar have won a bunch together over the last few years. What are a couple of your favorite wins?

Love: My most favorite run was in the BFA Derby in 2018 when she ran the fastest time of the week (in the Finals). I still remember that one like yesterday! My other favorite run is when she broke a 10 yr old arena record at the Circuit Finals in Davie, FL. It was one of those just perfect runs. She has given me a lot of those perfect runs through her career.

BRR: JL Josie Bar has won about everywhere you have taken her so what are your barrel racing plans moving into 2021?

Love: Early in the year we are going to try to get some embryos out of her and then go from there. I'm week to week when it comes to entering! I have commitment issues! LOL! With the rodeos being cancelled still right now, I'm just looking to the big barrel races.

BRR: What are a couple keys to having JL Josie Bar ready to run her best at a barrel race?

Love: She's pretty easy when it comes to that. Just keep her stomach happy and keep her hydrated. She's easy to please and just an easy horse who wants to do good for you. What works best for her is just keeping it simple.

While they were there, the time came for the baby to be born, and she gave birth to her firstborn, a son. She wrapped him in cloths and placed him in a manger, because there was no guest room available for them.

And there were shepherds living out in the fields nearby, keeping watch over their flocks at night. An angel of the Lord appeared to them, and the glory of the Lord shone around them, and they were terrified.

But the angel said to them, "Do not be afraid. I bring you good news that will cause great joy for all the people. Today in the town of David a Savior has been born to you; he is the Messiah, the Lord. This will be a sign to you: You will find a baby wrapped in cloths and lying in a manger.

SIRE OF $1.7 MILLION

With Christmas coming later in the week, the barrel racing schedule slowed down and we thought it may be a perfect time to reshare a few of our most popular training articles from during the period barrel racing was shut down in the spring. There were some great ideas and information shared. We hope you enjoy and have a blessed Christmas!

Rundown Recap – Tie Downs & Bonnets, Oh My!

By Tanya Randall

WPRA World Champion DM Sissy Hayday used a loose leather tie-down. 2019 futurity sensation Epic Guy wears a bonnet. RFD-TV's The American champion Cauto Fame is free headed.

We're not sure when, where or why it really started, but the use of head gear—tie-downs and bonnets—gets such a stigma in the general barrel racing population. Yet, at the highest levels, those making a living horseback, for the most, part view them as aids rather than short-cuts or band-aids for poor training.

Barrel Racing Report visited with Jolene Montgomery, Kassie Mowry and Brett Monroe to learn how they use various headgear to create winning horses.

Kassie Mowry

While leading futurity trainer and rider Kassie Mowry has won using tie-downs, her preference is toward bonnets.

"It's a feel thing really," said the two-time NFR qualifier from Dublin, Texas. "I like the way a bonnet feels a lot more. My horses will go to a barrel and pick their front end up—it's not something that's super noticeable—but that's what I want. I want their front end up and their butt in the ground. Sometimes when I want the front end to come up, naturally the head comes up with it. I don't want the head to come up too high."

With a background in English riding and eventing, Mowry explains the bonnet allows her to get the same feel as riding a jumper in a running martingale but is more stable for the sharp turns of our discipline.

"We can't run barrels in a martingale, but it's the same thing," she explained. "My horses go into a barrel like a jumper goes into a jump. They are elevated, but they can be too elevated with their headset and not be able to pull the turn off on the back side if they get too high."

"I also ride with a lot less bridle than most, so I feel like they'll have balance from that. It just helps keep them together. To me, the bonnet helps establish that consistent frame that I want them to be in. They're light, balanced and hold together in their turns."

Mowry has also used different placements of her bonnets to achieve specific feels. For example, her top three futurity horses all ran in bonnets last year. Epic Guy wore his in the traditional placement divots (supraorbital fossa) above the eyes, while Famous Ladies Man and CP He Will Be Epic wore higher placed bonnets more around their ears.

"We adjust them differently for the different headsets that we want—if you want your horse to put their nose out more or keep their heads in," she explained. "Last year when we ran Epic Guy, his bonnet sits right above his eyebrows (in the divot). It's low and that's because he tends to get low in his turns and wants to push his head out. He's too high-headed for a tiedown. It locked him up in the turns and he wasn't as quick. The bonnet down lower on his eyes kept him more balanced."

"If you look at Famous Ladies Man, he wears a bonnet and half-time you can't even see it because his browband hides it. It basically sits right around his ears. That's because when he finishes his turns, he brings his poll back toward me. Both are bonnets but they do two different things."

"CP He Will Be Epic ran in the same bonnet, the one that went around his ears, and without it, he was a hardly barrel horse!"

People might disagree about Mowry's use and placement of the bonnet, but as long as it works for her, she'll continue to do it.

The only horse that Mowry successfully ran in a tiedown was her 2016 NFR mount, Firewatermakemehappy.

"Without a tiedown, it would be a lot of work and tuning to keep him turning as quickly as he does with one," she said. "To save his body and his brain, I put one on him."

"Saving" her horses and keeping their training and competition experiences is largely the reason Mowry will use a bonnet. She says she can generally feel when a horse is lope circles or when they start progressing beyond a slow lope in the pattern if they're going to need one to help keep them in frame.

"For the most part, we'll put one on when they're going through faster than a lope but not quite a run," she said. "Even when we start doing smaller circles on some of them, you can tell they kind of get in the habit of elevating and hollowing their back out when you're wanting them to learn how to really drive underneath themselves. It just helps keep them from getting uncollected so they're learning the pattern.

"If I don't have one on and they get strung out, it will take them a good three or four strides to get them collected back up in my hands and by then they're not even focused on the turn. You've let too much time go by for the correction. If I can keep it from happening, I feel like they stay hooked and it's easier for them rather than letting them fall out of place and putting them back in. It just keeps them from getting out of position in the first place.

"I think they learn from positive reinforcement—doing it the correct way—rather than letting them fail and then fix it. It makes it less work—it's easier on them and their bodies earlier on. That's why I do it sooner rather than later. I feel like they'll allow it early on too than when they're running through the pattern. You slap one on them and they're not used to it, sometimes they're resist it more and aren't as forgiving of it."

Mowry likes her bonnets fairly loose as she doesn't want to hold their heads down with it. When she first introduces it to a horse, she'll back them up with the bridle reins while on the ground, which allows to horse to bump against the bonnet and learn how to give to it.

"I would never just step up on one that hasn't learned how to get off it," she said. "I kind of know my colts by the time I put one on. They're supple and know how to give to pressure so it's not as much of a big deal. For someone that rides their horses on a looser rein and not gathered up as much, I feel that horse might fight it or be more scared of it than one that we started a little more up in the bridle, used to giving to pressure. Those you can put in the roundpen and work them in it to get them used to it before stepping on."

Mowry says the bonnets and tie-downs even should be thought of as aids—training wheels—for horses.

"To me, it helps them learn without having to be so hard on them," she says. "I can probably train without one but then it would be a lot more of letting them fall on their face and fixing it. I rather not go through a lot of that. I don't want to have to be fixing a lot of stuff. I don't want them to get sore. I don't want them to get upset. I don't want to be getting after them if there is something—like a bonnet—that I can just put on to help them understand what I want. I want to help them and succeed and be confident and not having say you're wrong, you're wrong, you're wrong. I tell people it's the same as training wheels on a bike. You can learn to ride without them, but you're going to bust your body up doing it. Why not just put training wheels on for a while and learn to balance correctly?"

While some horses may need them throughout their career, others only need them for a short time.

"I had one that I ran in a bonnet his futurity year and I just got back on him this year and he doesn't need it anymore," she said. "He just matured. I feel a lot of the colts when they're immature, they're really noodle-ly feeling until they grow and widen up through their frontend and neck. It helps keep them together more."

Brett Monroe

Recent HHA Futurity Champion Rider Brett Monroe has successfully used both bonnets and tiedowns throughout his career.

Choosing between a bonnet or a tiedown often depends on a rider's preference and the horse's conformation, says Monroe.

"Some horses have a natural way of traveling and don't need anything," he said. "Some horses may have their neck tie in a little higher and may need a tiedown. I've had some horses that you could have run free-headed that I used a loose tiedown just in case I got in bind and needed to handle them. With the tiedown, they can't just stick their nose in the air and get away from you.

"It just depends on the horse and what they're doing."

Monroe says the horses that tend to be too stiff in a tiedown, he'll often end up using a bonnet.

"I've had some that I've used both on—a tiedown and a bonnet at different times," he said. His Southern Rebel Futurity Champion Shot Of Firewater won the title in a bonnet, but the gelding has also won futurity money with a tiedown.

His HHA Futurity Champion Frisky Ta Fame won some of her first futurity money with Jamie Hodges with a bonnet, but Monroe switched her to a tiedown.

"She'd run the barrels in either one," he said. "I didn't like when you'd get her shoulder, she'd stick her nose straight out and try to take it away from you a little bit. The tiedown kept her from sticking her nose out and you could hold her shoulder up a little more when you schooled her. With the bonnet, she'd stick her nose out and flatten out when schooled her to pick her shoulder up."

He added that's one of the downsides to a bonnet.

"Sometimes a bonnet will make a horse drop a little bit more," he said. "They'll go to raise up and the pressure may make the drop their shoulder a little more."

When trying a bonnet or a tiedown for the first time, Monroe suggested starting out with them loose and gradually working it tighter as they get used to it, adding the roundpen is also a great place for a horse to get used to one before riding with it.

"Some horses with a tiedown or bonnet will run backwards or rear up when they feel that pressure," he said. "You start with it loose and in the roundpen letting them get used to it before they get on."

Monroe also advised barrel racers to ride with the tiedown or bonnet a few days to let the horse get the feel for it before tightening it or deciding on a different option. They have to learn how to go in them just as they would a bit for the first time.

"If you start a colt with one and get them to respect it, you can ride with it looser and they won't push or brace on it much," he added. "The bonnet is the same way, once they get to respecting it, you can just have it on loose. I actually start them in wire (tiedowns or bonnets) and let them learn how to back off it. Once they know it's there, they tend not to raise up and put that much pressure on it and you can leave it looser or go to nylon or whatever."

Jolene Montgomery

Recent OKC Rookie Champion Jolene Montgomery has also won with tiedowns, bonnets and sans head gear.

"We usually start out with the colts free headed," she explained. "I think a lot of people like them that way is because you do get a lot more lateral flexion. They need to be pretty broke to use either (a tiedown or a bonnet) because they usually fight it a little in the beginning."

Montgomery tends to use tiedowns more than bonnets, but not for the traditional thought of holding a horse's head down.

"A tiedown is obvious if they're throwing their noses up, but a lot of times, that's not even what I use it for," she explained. "I use a tiedown more for rate. If you bump them and they throw their head up a little and bump the tiedown next, you get double rate. I'm not very good rating one on my own. They either need to be doing it on their own or I have a tiedown to help. Those horses get to running and stretched out, so a lot of times when you see my using a tiedown, it's not to keep their head down; it's to keep it in."

"I've had some that I've used both on—a tiedown and a bonnet at different times."

Montgomery will use a bonnet on a horse that tends to have a higher head set.

"They come out high from the wither," she said. "Those are horses that tend to stall out and get their heads up too high out of a barrel and lose their forward motion. The bonnet will keep their head and neck down but let them stretch their nose out so they don't have the fight there."

Even though Montgomery has some of the most educated horses at the barrel race, she'll still introduce a tiedown or bonnet carefully.

"I put them on them loose at first and I'll either go to the roundpen or lunge them with it first," she said. "Some of them do take offense. I try to leave them loose for the first day or two and try not to offend them too much."

Montgomery also advised to give a horse time to learn how to work in either a bonnet or tiedown.

"My stud I put a bonnet on him early and I didn't give him enough time before I took it off and began trying other things," she said of her HHA Futurity Reserve Champion Famous Sierra. "I ultimately ended up riding him in a bonnet. I didn't give him enough time to get use to it. It took him like a month. He didn't like it at first."

HEADIN' FOR HOME

by Sherry Morrison // Triple M (Mike Morrison Ministries)

We wish you a very Merry Christmas! It's a most CERTAIN time of year.... in an uncertain year! No matter how this year shaped up for us, Jesus is certain!

Now we celebrate His birth! A baby born to grow into our Savior! Let's focus on Him. Not the world. Not the problem. But the ANSWER!

He came. He's here. He's never leaving us.

Our problems pale as we look to Him, the answer. We look into the Word of God and find all we need to win in every battle that we may have. And let's be thankful this Christmas season.

Thankful for every family member, friend, gifts given and received. I'm thankful that you are reading this and my prayer is that each of you are encouraged and uplifted! God bless you all!

With my love! Sher
