AIRWAY EQ

"Air-Way EQ has helped maintain my horse's respiratory health, I've noticed clearer sounding airways and greater lung capacity. I use Breathe'O2 paste pre-race, he sounds great warming up and really fires without feeling winded."

A real decision is measured by the fact that you've taken a new action.
If there's no action,
you haven't truly decided.

With the new year coming later in the week, the barrel racing schedule slowed down and we thought it may be a perfect time to reshare a few of our most popular training articles from during the period barrel racing was shut down in the spring. There were some great ideas and information shared. We hope you have a Happy New Year!

Rundown Recap – Transitioning from Training to Competition

By Tanya Randall

When it comes to training barrel horses, how much barrel work do they need? What Barrel Racing Report discovered is that it depends on the horse and the program. Here, we visited with four successful trainers about their programs, from when they like to get their colts broke to when, and if, they transition to an “exercise” routine rather than training (on barrels) routine.

Kelsey Lutjen Treharne

Treharne likes to have her horses broke in the spring of their second year so they can have the hot summer months off to grow up. By fall, she has them back up to start on the pattern.

“I generally keep on going with them, but I have had some that need a break,” she said. “Some get sore and need a break. Others are tougher and really need to keep going. It all depends on the horse.”

To keep them liking their job, she tries not to work them on barrels every day.

“I don’t work them every day,” she said. “If there is a specific issue or something that I’m trying to get out of one I will try to stay on them three times in a row to make sure I get that problem addressed. With one that’s not giving me any problems, I might work them twice a week. If we’re going to exhibition I might work them at home slow two times a week and then when we go I’ll clip them through.”

While she has 2-year-olds off being started right now, her 3-year-olds would normally be starting the exhibition stage of their training journey, but unfortunately, no one can really go anywhere at the moment.

Ideally, she’d be able to exhibition enough through the spring that she can back off again in the summer.

“I like to back off of them in the summer of their 3-year-old year,” she said. “Sometimes we’ll rope the Smarty steer on them and do some different things on them, depending on the horse. We try to get them peaked back up and ready to roll in November.

It depends on the horse. Some of the them need work to stay sharp and I’ll work them (on barrels) a couple of times a week. I’ve had some that are better when they’re not worked and are fresh. Honestly, it depends on the horse and I try to let the horse tell me what they need.”

Having moved to Texas, Treharne is trying to concentrate more on the early futurities with 4-year-olds. Although she had a very successful start to the 2020 season with VF Cream Puff and VF Eddies Alive (“Alvin”), she felt behind at the BFA. So, this year, she had planned on trying to have her horses peak sooner so she didn’t feel as stressed.

“I feel like I experiment with them every year,” she admitted. “I’m just trying to get them to where they can handle the pressure and stay together. This year, which the virus is cramping my style a little bit, I was going to try to put a little more pressure on my colts sooner and seeing if it couldn’t help me peak them a little better. I felt last year I was a little late peaking them. They did really good, but I was a little worried. I don’t want to be a week before the BFA feeling like I have to put my horse back together.”

As part of keeping her horses together as she adds pressure sooner, Treharne has recently gone back to ride with her colt-breaker to sharpen some of the aids that may have been lost or dulled in the process of adding speed.

“I like to go back and do things like that just to make sure mine are listening to me, because I have a couple right now that I put the speed to and they got a little dull and not as responsive, so I’ve kind of gone back to the drawing board on some of those,” she said.

With her current year futurity horses, Treharne is keeping it light but still trying to have them ready for the Old Fort Days Futurity in Fort Smith, Arkansas, if it goes as scheduled for mid-May. Cream Puff and Alvin are perfect examples of how it varies from horse to horse.

Because Cream Puff is a hotter horse, her pattern work is usually at walk. Occasionally before going somewhere she’ll tune on her but for the most part she rarely sees the pattern. Alvin, on the other hand, tends to get strong and needs occasional barrel work to be reminded to stay in her hands. Even so, Alvin’s work at home is slow.

“He’ll start going around the barrels two, maybe three times a week, and it will be things like trotting and slow loping and really staying in my hands,” she said of his Fort Smith prep.

“I don’t really do a whole lot on those horses,” she said. “If they’re working good, I just try to leave them alone. I just want to keep them liking their job. I don’t typically work one every day. I did work mine a bunch last week because I could actually get in my arena!”

Taylor Hildreth

Hildreth is a big believer in giving horses breaks throughout the training process.

“I’m a big believer in giving them breaks. I set goals and once they reach those goals I turn them out or let them be ranched or roped on, just doing something different,” she said. “Sometimes I find too that if I get to a tough point with them, I’ll just turn them out. Whether they’re sore and you’re just missing it, if they’re just over it, I think just giving them time away from the pattern.

Since Hildreth typically runs 5-year-olds her program is a little more delayed.

“They’ll usually get 60 to 90 days as a 2-year-old and they get turned out most the winter,” she explained. “As a 3-year-old, I usually put 90 days, give or take, to fine tune them a little bit—get those buttons that I really like—and get them loping a nice pattern. It’s not super-fast or anything but I’m not having to help them a ton in their turns. They’re finding their points and know where to put their feet.”

Once they’ve perfected their pattern at a lope, those horses get turned out or get another job, like roping the sled or doing ranch work.

“It depends on the horse,” she said. “Some need the time to mature, while others need a job.”

When Hildreth brings her horses back at the start of their fourth year, she’ll add speed and start hauling to exhibitions. This is also when she’ll start adding a little pressure in volumes, rather than a steady diet of increased demands.

“I’m more of a put the pressure on them and take it away kind of person. I ask for more and then do something different. I don't just work them every day just slow, slow, slow. I try to set goals and ask for a little more at a time and see if they can take it and go from there. I think if you go too slow too long you get them bored and they also don't learn how to take pressure."

As far as her pattern work, she doesn't do it every day with any of her horses.

"With my 3- and 4-year-olds I probably work them on the pattern itself probably three days week," she said. "Once they get to where they know it, I back off quite a bit. Once they get to the point that I can work them and they do everything, I back off to maybe one day a week on the pattern and the rest of the time I'll do drills or ride in the pasture. I just change things up. We'll rope the sled on them, just do other things."

With her competition-ready horses, she has some that rarely see the pattern and others that need to be schooled occasionally.

"The ones that I'm running—some of them need the work and others may never need to see the pattern. Those I'll ride in the pasture and might walk or trot the pattern at the end of the day and be done. Generally, I'm not one that constantly drills on the pattern."

Her futurity winner Too Chains was one that rarely saw the pattern.

"Too Chains almost never saw the pattern," she said. "When he was going, he maybe saw it once a week. I would just walk, trot and put his feet exactly where I wanted them. That horse was very literal though. I would walk and trot the pattern exactly how I wanted him to run. The rest of the time we rode outside. He loved being in the pasture and roping the sled. He was a business horse too. He took everything very seriously."

As for her futurity horses this year, she says it's hard to really tell what they need because they haven't gone much.

"They ran in January and that's it!" she laughed. "I have a couple that do need slow work, so I'll do that two times a week and then ride them in the pasture. I have a couple that aren't even seeing the pattern."

"Typically, the year that they're running, if they really step it up and want to be businesslike, they don't see the pattern as much. The business-minded ones, you show them something and they take it more seriously and do their job every time, they see the pattern quite a bit less. Then you get the ones that are looking around and don't really take it seriously, those ones seem to see it a little more."

Jolene Montgomery

Montgomery likes to get her horses as 2-year-olds. While she does take horses from other colt starters, she's really enjoying having her husband Kerby break them because it allows continuous flow in her training before giving them break.

"Now that Kerby is breaking them, I prefer they send them to him to be broke," she said. "My favorite thing about that is if he puts 30 to 60 days on them then I can put a month or two on them, get them started loping the barrels and see if I like them and then I'll send them home for a little bit. I'll get them back about January."

Montgomery says she likes to get them started on the pattern at 2 rather than 3. The exception to that would be a 3-year-old that comes to her really broke.

"I've had the most success on the ones I've started on barrels as a 2-year-old," she said.

The important thing to note is Montgomery likes to work toward a nice easy, collected lope around the barrels with her 2-year-olds. She's not asking them to stick a hock and come around like a finished horse.

"It's slow it's collected," she said. "At first, I'm just at trot and lope them and let them loop around it. I'm not trying to get them to stick a leg and come around. Once I have good shoulder control, I'm loping at least three feet from the barrel. They're not digging in and putting any pressure on themselves. They play a lot harder in the pasture than what I'm riding them."

Montgomery says she probably works her horse on the barrel four days a week, but it's not as hard of work as it is steady.

"When I say work them, I don't mean work them hard all the time," she said. "I try not to be on them very long. In the winter it's longer because they're fresher. It totally depends on the horse. Some need a pretty long warm up to be paying attention. In the winter, I might ride one up to 45 minutes. In the summer, you get about 20 minutes before you're done."

"I will go back off, just boredom loping the barrels, just muscle memory. It's not pounding on the barrels. We'll set up the poles and trot through the poles. Every once in a while I'll push cows when Kerby is roping."

Breaks for her horses typically come due to her competition schedule and the weather.

"The weather decides for us because we don't have an indoor," she laughed. "If it's too muddy they don't get to work barrels. Every once in a while, I'll take them and pasture ride them, but most of the time if the ground is good they get loped around the barrels a couple of times. It's not hard work, just easy loping around the barrel."

Montgomery likes a hotter, "stingier" horse and a steady diet of easy barrel work helps keep them from getting "barrel fresh."

"People think if they're too hot they shouldn't work them on the barrels, but then they tend to get barrel fresh. They get overly excited because they haven't worked barrels in a while. If you make it super nonchalant—like I'll be loping circles to the right on those hotter ones and lope a bigger circle right up to the first barrel, where they don't even know it's coming, make it not a big deal at all."

While she does have to haul her horses to ride due to the weather, she typically won't start exhibiting until late spring, early summer.

"I've hauled my 3-year-olds and rode with other people," she said. "They've been hauled to open arenas and friend's houses though. I probably would have taken the ones farthest along to exhibition once or twice by now, but I don't really start going until May or June."

As far as backing off on their pattern work, Montgomery says they usually continue to see barrels in some fashion until they've proven to be solid winners.

"I still work them pretty good until they've worked nice and won something the last 20 runs in a row. I keep working mine. I think of it like a professional football player. They don't just go jog around the track and go play football. They practice football."

Even superstar Jets Heart And Soul gets a little barrel work.

"On him I only work barrels once or twice a week," she said. "This would apply to anything like him—one that's really, really turny—if you work them too much, they get too turny. He won something for me almost every run. There's no reason to work him all the time."

Pete Oen

Oen rarely starts 2-year-olds on the pattern and even spends the first month or so on his 3-year-olds just riding them and focusing on the basics, if necessary.

"I don't really believe in starting 2-year-olds on the pattern. If I do, it usually for those fall sales like at the BFA. I'll piddle with them when they're almost turning 3, but I don't think in the summer of their 2-year-old year that they're physically and mentally ready for that. Maybe October or November, I'll piddle with those horses on the pattern, especially if it's a sale horse, because they bring more money when they're started on the pattern."

Ideally, he'll get a horse straight from the colt breaker to fine tune it's handling before giving it a break.

I'll have some 2-year-olds come to me right after they're broke in the spring and I'll put another 90, maybe 120, days on them, then they'll either go home or stay here on board until mid-January.

"If I don't get one until they're 3, they need to ride fairly well so we don't have spend time teaching them the fundamentals. Those colts that are quite a bit more broke go to the pattern so much faster. I'll get some colt in here in February that I don't feel like they're broke enough, we'll spend a month or two just riding them before we put them on the pattern."

Oen usually spends three, maybe four days a week trying to teach his colts the pattern when they're 3.

"I'll spend a day or two each week just riding them. On my barrel work days I don't go through every drill they've ever been taught. I expect them to be able comprehend and retain so I don't have to start over each day. If I do, those horses generally aren't for me.

"On my barrel work days, I loosen them up a little bit, lope circles both ways, stop them and go the barrels rather quickly," he said. "I think you can get those horses confused. They get lost because they've been doing drills for 20 minutes before going to the barrels. If they're fresh, you have to ride the fresh off, but you don't have to reteach them every day. I usually go to the barrels within five minutes of getting on one, I'll go through the barrels three or four times and be done."

The key, he says, is to quit when they're doing right and not to expect perfection every day.

"I always try to end on a good note," he said. "It doesn't have to be spectacular as long as they're improving just a little bit. As soon as they respond right whether it is the second time they've gone through or the sixth time if it's a little slower (learning) horse, I'll quit right there. I don't have to repeat it two or three more times. I used to years ago, but I don't think that way anymore."

Once his horses are high loping or cruising the pattern, Oen will start hauling off to exhibitions. He doesn't believe in hauling them if you have go through slower than that.

"If we're hauling them and they're exhibitioning well, their barrel work at home tapers off greatly," he said. "We're trying to take them twice a week if we can. We're not beating up and down the road to every exhibition we can. I think if you have good ground, you can train those horses at home. On the norm, before I even go to an exhibition, I want to feel confident enough that I can at least high lope or cruise them through."

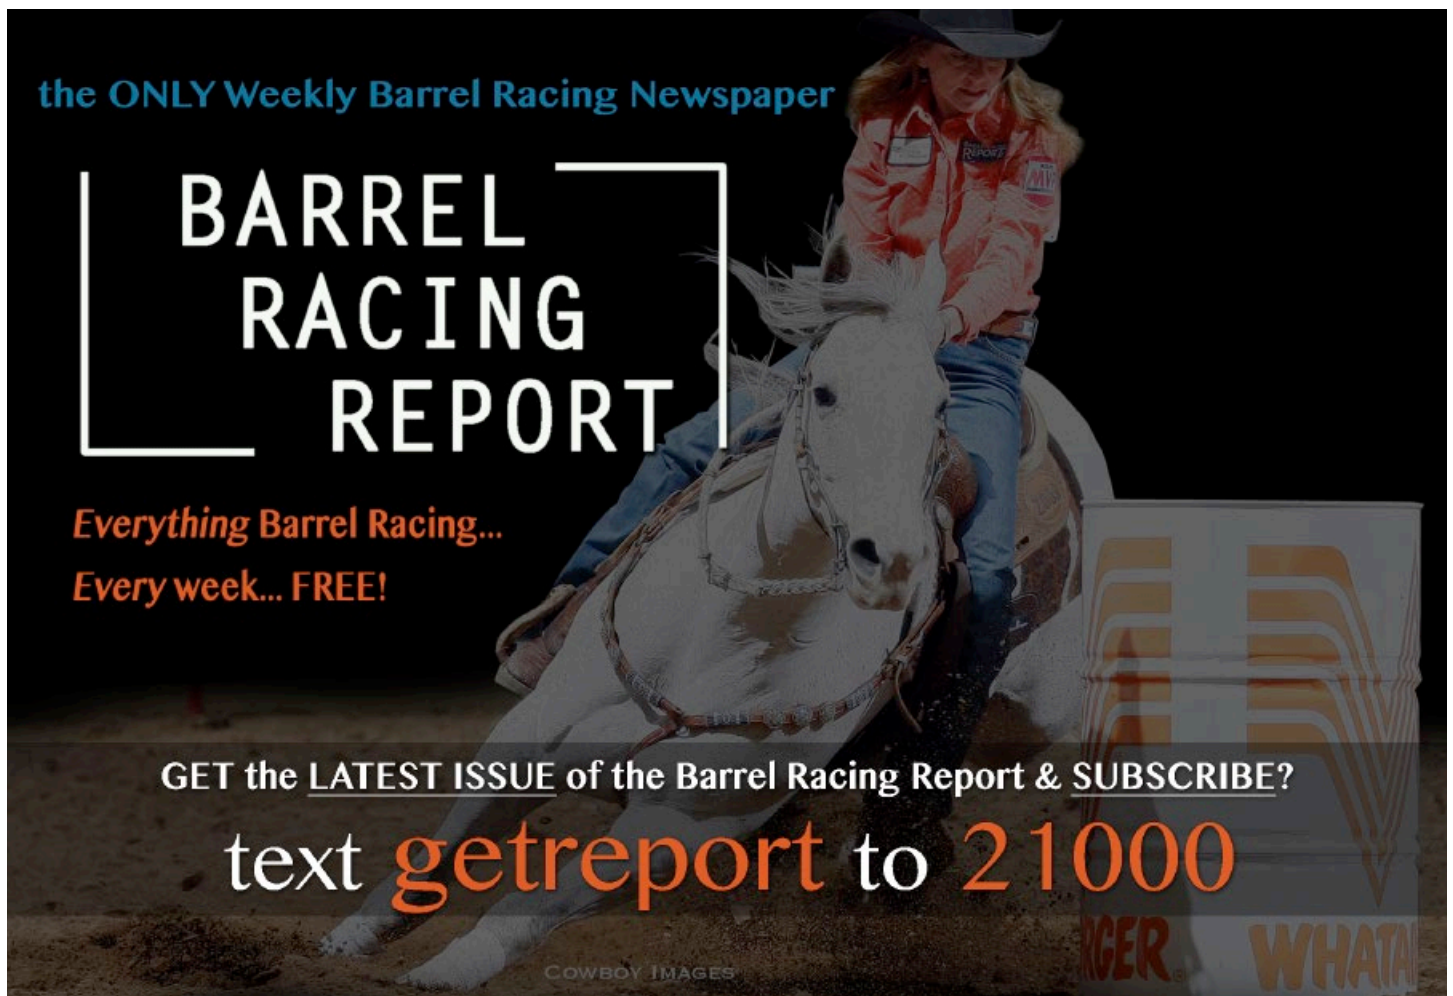

His competition ready horses are still getting some barrel work, but the winning ones get more exercise than barrel work.

"My A string is getting ridden three days a week," he said. "They piddle, play on the barrels maybe once a week. If something is coming up maybe twice a week. I don't just quit going around the barrels on the horses that I'm currently running.

"The B string is still probably getting the barrels three days a week to get with the program. I'll still give them a couple of days off after we go to a futurity like the other horses, but while the other are just getting exercised, they're still getting barrel work."

His riding schedule too adjusts for competition.

"I'm not going to ride a horse Monday through Friday and take him to a barrel race on Saturday and Sunday," he said. "I might ride Monday, Tuesday, Thursday. It's more about gut intuition than anything. I'm not saying I'm always right. If I'm wrong I try to learn from it and adjust. I've really tried to think about the horse more than I did when I was younger." ~BRR

Rundown Recap – Transitioning from Futurities to Rodeos

By Tanya Randall

Last week, Barrel Racing Report discussed the transition in the training process with four successful futurity horse trainers and competitors. We discussed the transition from religious barrel work to mostly exercise with light tuning. This week we're taking it a step further. We've asked WPRA & PWBR World Champion and current WPRA Standings Leader Brittany Pozzi Tonozzi, Hallie Hanssen, a multiple aged event champion, pro rodeo winner and a top competitor within the WCRA and two-time NFR qualifier and multiple aged event champion Kassie Mowry about transitioning their aged event stars to rodeo competition.

Brittany Pozzi Tonozzi

When two-time world champion barrel racer Brittany Pozzi Tonozzi rodeo seasons her young horses she's always doing so in the process of trying to make the National Finals Rodeo. It's not glamorous. It's hard work. Plus, you've got to be able to roll with the punches because it is a process.

"You better be alright with losing for a while because it's not always the dream process," she stated frankly. "I've had horses like Duke (Yeah Hes Firin) that just transitioned – nothing ever bothers them, doesn't care about the ground – to ones like Mona (Kisskiss Bangbang), who won three-rounds at Calgary as a 4-year-old and then forgot how to turn a barrel for two more years. It's a lot of blood, sweat and tears and fighting your head."

For Tonozzi, the seasoning process is a little different as she's on the road most of the summer. While most people would want to start out at the amateurs before heading off for the summer, Tonozzi doesn't have that luxury.

"There's different levels of seasoning," she said. "You might want to start out going to some amateur rodeos before you take off for the summer. Most of the seasoning I'm talking about packing up and leaving home for two months."

In her experience, the seasoning process for her always seems to go better when she has an older solid horse to haul with a young horse.

"When you're seasoning them at the rodeos it's always easier if you have that good, solid horse to carry with them so you can keep your confidence up," she said. "You can pick the right situations for the colt and ease them into it. If you don't have that option, you've got to be okay with losing and basically taking it as it comes, changing on the fly, going places to tune on the side."

For instance, the first year she made the short round at Cheyenne on Mona, Tonozzi made an extra stop to tune the mare before the rodeo.

"I stopped in at Laramie after driving all night," she recalled. "I slept for a couple of hours and got up and worked my horse in ankle deep mud. You just have to go the extra mile when seasoning."

When she decides to enter a futurity horse at its first rodeo depends on the individual. However, she has been forced to ride colts at some of the richest rodeos simply because she had no other option.

"Katniss—Ima Famous Babe—I ran her as a 5-year-old so I felt she was a little more ready for rodeos as a 6-year-old than sometimes a 4-year-old coming off the futurities into their 5-year-old year," she said. "I hate the 5-year-old year. It just seems like they think they know what they're doing and you can't tell them anything. I've always struggled seasoning as a 5-year-old."

"Katniss, I took her to rodeos at 6, but it was really easy. I don't know if that was just her or if it was because I gave her one more year to grow up. Now Mona, she was an amazing 4-year-old. I ran her at Calgary as a 4-year-old because she was literally the only sound option that I had. That's not something I normally would have done. Then she turned 5 and we hated each other's guts. That 5-year-old year was so difficult. Her 6-year-old year I finally got her to come around and her 7-year-old year, we made the NFR." Babe On The Chase ("Birdie") was as challenging as Mona. After a stellar futurity year, she found herself up for sale as a 5-year-old. Duke, on the other hand, was a great 4-year-old futurity horse and as a 5-year-old he was even better.

"It just depends on the individual," she continued. "I think as a whole if you run them at the futurities as a 4-year-old, maybe take them to a few slacks as a 5-year-old, maybe introduce them to a few perfs, but don't make it your only horse and you're trying to make the NFR. It's just too much."

She reiterated not getting frustrated with the process.

"Some horses season to it like a fish in water," she said. "Some are ducks out of water. That doesn't mean they're not going to make a phenomenal rodeo horse; it just means they're struggling a little bit. They're just trying to figure it out. You have to treat each horse as an individual—no two are alike. You've got to be so in tune with what that horse needs because there is no step-by-step process."

The tricky part for some is knowing the difference between continuing to pay your dues as part of the process and when it's time to back off and regroup.

"You also have to know when to stop. You have to know your horse. You have to know when things are coming unwound and you can't fix it in the middle of the week, you need to back off."

"You can't be like 'Oh I want to go rodeo' and just go. You have to have your horse's best interest at heart. It can't be that you just want to go out for the summer and have fun and good times with your friends. It is fun, but for me it's not fun to go out there and not win."

Hallie Hanssen

When Hallie Hanssen headed to the winter rodeos this season, she hadn't expected to be riding her futurity stars from last year, yet her two Epic Leader mares handled the pressure well enough to pick up checks at the pro rodeos in Fort Worth and San Antonio as well as the WCRA Rodeo in Kansas City.

"Normally I never would take a horse just off their futurity year to something that big, especially inside at something like that where everything is on top of you," she said. "Usually, it would be somewhere outside where everything is far away."

"It was quiet an eye opener for them. They handled it really well. I was probably more nervous about it than they were, honestly. I kept the same routine with them so I don't think they felt any different and were confident."

Ideally, Hanssen says she would start with slacks.

"They're used to announcing and music," she said, "but nothing as loud as (a rodeo performance). I'd see how they did before working them into some performances to season them at those. Normally I'd do it at an outdoor rodeo where I know the ground is pretty decent. I'm not just going to throw them on ground that I don't think is good because I want them to continue to build their confidence."

Ground is the key factor for Hanssen.

"For the me, it's picking the best arenas that have the best ground to transition them. If it's muddy, I just turn out. It's not worth it. It's not a confidence boosting run. It's hard to know if you're going to have a mudder if you don't run them, but I feel the transitioning point isn't the time to do that."

Hanssen usually saves rodeo introduction until her horses are 5-year-olds, which is often dependent on how long her clients plan to keep horses with her.

"Typically, I won't run a futurity horse at rodeo," she said. "I try to focus more on winning as much as I can at the futurities. I feel that if I take them to a rodeo and then try to go back to the futurities, where the horses are giving it their all, they're probably not going to get in there (for the money).

"Sometimes the ground conditions aren't the best for a futurity horse who thinks it's going to run in there and hold them. At that time, I want them to have as much confidence as they can. When I do transition them over I find they always have a period of adjustment, trying to figure out that they can't just run in there as fast as they could before because the ground maybe won't hold them. I feel they go through a period of time where they might not be clocking as fast as they did as a futurity horse just because they start to guard themselves a little bit.

She discovered that when transitioning Tres Movidas rodeos as a derby horse.

"She really stands up on anything, but when I would take her back and run at the derbies against horses that hadn't been out there to the rodeos, you could tell the difference," she explained. "Like her first run, she'd run in there and she'd be feeling that ground to see if it would hold her or if she needed to stand up and protect herself."

Kassie Mowry

Leading futurity rider Kassie Mowry of Dublin, Texas, made her first NFR in 2005 aboard a 4-, 5- and 6-year-old. When she went back in 2018, the horse she was riding, Firewatermakemehappy, wasn't a fully seasoned rodeo horse when she started her haul.

Mowry will go the extra mile to prepare horses even when it adds to her own workload. Whether is a jackpot in the same venue before the rodeo or practice session before dawn, Mowry is going to take advantage of that time to better prepare her young horses for the challenges at hand.

"It's so competitive," she said. "I'm competing against seasoned veterans on their territory so I'm going to take any advantage that I possibly can. I'm going to let my horse see that arena or a weird angle to the first or the ground. I'm going to let them experience those things if I can before they run in their blind. There's a time when I quit having to do it. They mature and know how to go in there and handle it, but when you come out of the futurities you have to protect them a little bit. They can run in there without having to see it first, because there are places that don't, but I feel to get that extra edge, if I'm allowed, I'm going to do it."

Mowry says the setup more than the atmosphere is what she takes into consideration.

"I don't think people put a whole lot of thought into the different arena setups," she said, noting that even most jackpot horses today run in mostly indoor setups as opposed to outdoor pens with standard patterns. "To me the biggest factor in the differences between rodeos and futurities is pattern size, arena size and ground conditions more so than crowd. It's not the surroundings as much as it is the arena itself. I try to pick horses that I think will suit the arena conditions."

At Rodeo Houston this year, she chose to run Famous Ladies Man ("Emmitt"). One of the best futurity colts in the country in 2019, Mowry had earned the right to compete at Houston because Emmitt won the Sandhill Rodeo in Odessa, Texas, with a sub-14 run.

Although the two arenas are completely different, Odessa is a small coliseum with deeper footing and Houston is two acres of exposed hardpan, they both had a small pattern with a blind approach to the first barrel.

"It's probably the hardest setup I've ever seen," Mowry said of Houston. "It's challenging even for older horses. I figured because (Emmitt) would hunt that first barrel and lock on to it, I would have a little easier time of running him there than one of my other ones."

She also checked her expectations at the gate. Although she thought Emmitt could really excel at Houston—which he eventually did—she didn't expect him to.

"My first run there I was over a second off," she said. "I came out of the arena and laughed. What could you expect? It surprised him. The next day he came back ran one of the fastest times that had been run in there. I didn't have any expectations again. If he came in and fell on his face again, it's okay. He doesn't have any experience.

"You have to let it come and be patient. If you put pressure on them, then the more frustrated you and the horse will be come. You don't realize how that goes into your riding. That just creates more nerves. I've been doing this for so long I know how to handle my nerves. If I need to get aggressive and get myself and the horse amped up I can. If have one that's getting a little nervous, I can go sit in a corner with my feet out of the stirrups and legs relaxed with the reins on their neck. You just have to know your horse and what they need at certain times."

She says the rodeo transition is more on the rider to make the transition smoother.

"It's more the rider than the horse," she said. "We have more influence on the horse than people think. I know what my horses can handle and what they're comfortable with. I know them very well.

"Horses feed off you and the circumstances around them. I would try to really handle the nerves and think about what your channeling to the horse. If you're nervous and your legs are clamped up on them, that's going to make them nervous because they're wondering why you're holding on to them so tight. You need to be really aware of what you're channeling to your horse."

How you ride is also a factor. You can't change how you ride because it's a rodeo. For instance, if you take a horse that's used to being thrown away and go to handling them to adapt to a strange situation at a rodeo, that's typically when things start to go wrong. A rider may assume it's the horse reacting to the situation—the rodeo environment in this case—but it's really a rider issue.

"My horses are trained to be handled," Mowry said. "If I go in there and say, 'Pay attention! Something is about to happen.' They know what that means. They don't throw their heads up and go, 'Why are you handling me?' and get scared."

More than anything, Mowry says you can't be afraid to make a mistake or try something new because even the best horses do when learning something new.

"Doing it is how you learn, so you just have to keep doing it," she said. "Take notes. If something worked, write it down. Hey, my horse did better when he was able to stand over by his buddy before he ran. Or, my horse got a little nervous, but I went and did some rollbacks and backing and really got them focusing on me, and he did better. It's finding out what works for each horse. It goes back to knowing your horse." ~BRR

Harry L. Blackwell, 1942-2020

Harry Lee Blackwell, 78, of Naylor passed away December 25, 2020 at Poplar Bluff Regional Medical Center.

Harry was born June 4, 1942 to Jim and Floy Turner Blackwell in Doniphan, MO. Harry joined the Missouri National Guard just before graduating from Naylor High School in 1960. He married his wife of 59 years, Vivian VanDover in Naylor during the summer of 1961.

After attending Arkansas State University, Harry returned to Poplar Bluff and began his first job in the car business at Bill Childress Chevrolet. Eight years later, Harry and Roger Baldwin opened their first business, Blackwell Baldwin Oldsmobile Cadillac, in Poplar Bluff. Later in his career, along with his brother and two daughters, Harry started the Harry Blackwell family of dealerships in Dexter and Malden.

Harry enjoyed being on his farm raising both angus cattle and breeding barrel horses. He and Vivian were listed for several decades as being in the Top 10 All-Time Breeders in the Barrel Horse Racing Industry. He truly enjoyed watching a "good barrel race" and his family ride the horses he bred and raised.

Throughout the years, Harry has served terms on the General Motors Presidential Advisory Board, the Highway 67 Coalition, was a former President of Poplar Bluff Industries and was voted Co-Citizen of the year in 2000. Harry took great pride in bringing several essential businesses to the Poplar Bluff area. Harry also loved selflessly serving his community by contributing to various local charities. He especially enjoyed the annual toy & coat drive at Mt. Calvary Powerhouse Church and the community outreach at First United Methodist Church of Poplar Bluff, where Harry was a longtime member and served as usher.

In addition to Vivian, Harry is survived by two daughters, Amanda Clayman and Lori (Troy) Amoss; a brother, Rob (Vicki) Blackwell; four grandchildren, Anna Cate (Kevin) Nash, Brock Hunt, and Shay and Trell Amoss; and several nieces and nephews.

In addition to his parents, Harry is preceded in death by his brother & sister-in-law, Jimmy & Darlene Blackwell.

Harry has asked that donations be made to the United Cancer Assistance Network (UCAN) of Poplar Bluff, MO to provide hope for other families experiencing this life altering diagnosis. UCAN 1899 N. Westwood Blvd Suite C PMB 172, Poplar Bluff, Mo, 63901.

A Tribute to Stan Sigman

Stan Sigman, a partner in Ruidoso Downs and a former giant in the wireless communications industry, passed away unexpectedly on December 21 on his family ranch south of Hondo, Texas.

In addition to being a partner in the ownership of Ruidoso Downs and the Ruidoso Select Yearling Sale since 2017, Sigman also was a partner in champion and leading sire Kiss My Hocks and in the popular performance horse stallion Bucks Hancock Dude.

After attending high school in Hereford, Texas in 1965, Sigman took a job in the Southwestern Bell Telephone Co. warehouse. He held that job until he graduated from college at West Texas State (now West Texas A&M) and continued his involvement in the communications industry until he retired in 2007. Growing up in the cattle town of Hereford, Sigman was always involved with horses and cattle. After marrying his high school sweetheart Gerry Lynn, the Sigmans continued their involvement with horses both as breeders and trainers. They raced at tracks in Texas, Oklahoma and New Mexico.

Stan Sigman's job that started as a telephone company warehouse employee led to leadership positions with SBC Communications. While serving as group President and Chief Operating Officer of SBC Communications, Sigman directed its integration with BellSouth to form Cingular Wireless in 2001. In 2004, he led Cingular's acquisition of AT&T Wireless, thereby creating the largest cellular wire carrier in the United States. Sigman served as Chief Operating Officer of AT&T Mobility until his retirement in late 2007.

While with AT&T mobility, Sigman was contacted by his friend Steve Jobs of Apple and that relationship evolved into the development of the iPhone.

During his long business career, the Sigman family had to put their horse business on the back burner as they were stationed in such places as Oklahoma, Texas, Missouri and Mexico. After Stan's retirement, they began purchasing property in the ranch country west of San Antonio. The Sigmans soon began purchasing horses and developing a program of breeding and raising American Quarter Horses for roping, barrel racing, and racing.

Involved in several different philanthropic endeavors over the years, the one program that Stan cherished the most was a program for wounded members of the armed services and their families and survivors. The Sigman family hosts hunting, fishing, and other outdoor activities on their ranch for those individuals.

From his childhood, Stan had fond memories of family trips to Ruidoso Downs. In 2012, the Sigman family purchased a home in Alto, New Mexico and then purchased a membership in the Ruidoso Jockey Club. When R.D. Hubbard decided to sell Ruidoso Downs and the sale company in 2016, Stan became partners with John Andreini, Johnny Trotter, and Chicho Flores in creating All American Ruidoso Downs (AARD).

Stan led the new entity that became the track's owner in the fall of 2017 and led the hiring of Jeff True as the track's President and General Manager. The next year, Andreini passed away leaving AARD with just Sigman, Trotter, and Flores.

In the first three years under AARD, the track made many strides. The one that pleased Stan and Gerry Lynn the most was the creation of the new chapel and a Prayer Garden on the track's backside.

"Everything about owning a racetrack is not fun or easy," Sigman said more than once during the past few years. "But when I get down about something in racing that might not be good, I think about the church there on the backside. That always picks me up and assures us that God has placed us where he needs us."

Stan is survived by his loving wife Gerry Lynn, his son Spicer, daughters Lourdes Funes and Jodi Adams plus grandchildren Spicer Gripp, Piper, Isaac, Caleb, Rilyn and Stephan.

Memorials in honor of the life of Stan Sigman can be directed to the Ruidoso Jockey Club Foundation.

** Stan Sigman had been a mainstay in the barrel horse world over the past decade. His horses carried the name "Namgis" as the first word of their name followed by the letter "D" and a number. As of Dec 29, 2020 Sigman had bred the winners of $771,445 according to Equistat. One of his biggest winners was Namgis D 33 who Emily Beisel had ridden to spectacular NFR performances in 2018 & 2020.

Our thoughts and prayers are with the Sigman family.

HEADIN' FOR HOME

by Sherry Morrison // Triple M (Mike Morrison Ministries)

Are you looking forward to the New Year? I think this year we all are. What are we going to do? What are we going to do different? Well, as Christians, we need to be sure that we are doing the will of the Lord. Right? Eph. 5:14-17 instructs us to "wake up and Christ will give us light. To walk circumspectly, not as fools, but wise, redeeming the time for the days are evil."

Oh boy howdy, does that describe the days we are in? Yes it does, but we are not limited to what the government says, or the media. Friends we are redeemed from evil by our Lord. We are blessed and protected.

Please take the time to read Psl. 91 again. It will encourage you and strengthen you. If changes are needed, make them today. There's no need to wait one more minute to make adjustments that will bring the desired result in your life.

2021 is our year! As skilled believers we will follow our Spirit and not our heads. We are taking back our country, our states and our cities. And we will be a blessing everywhere we go! It starts with us! God bless!

Mike and Sherry Morrison pastor "Church at the Barn" in Gillette, WY. They also travel to other areas ministering at barrel races, ranches, rodeos, churches and home Bible studies.
