Kindyl Scruggs Captures Second IPRA Barrel Racing Championship

By Tanya Randall

Southaven, Mississippi, barrel racer Kindyl Scruggs claimed her second barrel racing championship with the International Pro Rodeo Association at the 55th Annual International Finals Rodeo, held January 16-19 in the Lazy E Arena in Guthrie, Oklahoma.

Scruggs, the 2016 IPRA Champion, collected $42,155 to win the title, most of which was won aboard her 11-year-old gelding Melrose Chrome, a project horse she picked up four years ago.

"It means a lot to me that I won it on a horse that's not supposed to be what he is," she said of the reformed ducker. She traded a 2-year-old and gave a little cash for the gelding by First Place Texas out of the Krimps Elmer mare CrownRoyalMercedes.

"It makes it a little bit sweeter that he finally came around and continues to stay strong and do good for me," she continued. "The first year was kind of rough. The second year was a little better. The last two years, he's been really, really good.

"I don't raise my horses. I get horses with issues and try to fix it and win on it. I have the same feeling about fixing a horse as most people have about raising their own."

Unfortunately the gelding tore his hamstring while competing at the lucrative IPRA-approved rodeo in St. Tite, Quebec, Canada, in September.

She found a suitable replacement through Samantha Pike, her veterinarian at Riverside Equine. Pike's husband Dusty had been riding WoodB Streaking Lil ("Lil") for the mare's owner and breeder Jimmy Leek, grandfather of NFR qualifier Tacye Matthews.

"Molli Montgomery trained her and futuritized her," Scruggs explained. "Dusty Pike has run her for probably seven or eight years. He's won a bunch of barrel races and some slot races on her."

Scruggs said it was a bit of an adjustment learning to jockey the 14-year-old daughter of Woodbridge out of Shootin Tootin Party, by Shoot Yeah.

"She's a little particular the way she runs, so it took us a little time," she said. "I ran her at Franklinton, Louisiana, the last weekend of September. That was my first time to run her. It was two separate rodeos. I ran her the first night and I hit the first barrel. Then I won the second rodeo on her, and she'd never been to a rodeo before that weekend. I was like, 'I've got to figure this out because at least I

"It's been a learning curve because I don't ride a lot of nice open horses. Usually if it's something older, it has a problem, and I have to fix it. With her, I just have to be a jockey, so it took a minute. We're starting to get more consistent."

Scruggs will also ride Lil in Chrome's place at the American Contender East Regional this weekend in Lexington, Kentucky, to give the gelding a little more time to heal. She's hoping to have him back in a month or two.

She's also sticking with her plan to go to fewer, but better paying rodeos, like she did last year.

"My goal for last year was to go to as few places as I could and win as much as I could, even if it wasn't an IPRA rodeo" she explained. "Instead of hauling further to win the IPRA, I was going to stay a little closer to home and maybe not haul as much. I have to try to figure out a way to win more money with less runs and see how it goes."

The 10-time IFR qualifier and two-time IFR Champion also used the World Champion Rodeo Alliance's partnership with the IPRA to her advantage. Scruggs got her $10,000 bump in the IPRA World Standings back in January 2024 at the WCRA's Stampede at the E in Guthrie.

"The WCRA has been a big deal for me," said Scruggs, who won the WCRA's Women's Rodeo World Championships last May. "I don't have incentive horses, so I don't have the opportunity to run for a lot of money or when I do I have to pay a slot race entry fee, which is several hundred or a thousand dollars to win that same money. With the WCRA, you can nominate a few rodeos, go to their quarterly rodeos and win that same money for not nearly the entry fee that you would pay at a slot race."

Scruggs, who wanted to thank her sponsors and supporters Bradley Bits-Chase Bradley, Dr. Samantha Pike at Riverside Equine, farrier Cody Gardner and Kathleen Daigle Animal Communicator, was also able to quit her office job with her WCRA money.

"I ended up leaving my job in August," she said. "I've got several client horses, and I give a bunch of lessons to kids. I've bought and sold a couple of horses—that's how I invested some of that money. I always tell everyone the (WRWC) definitely gave me a career change!"

Bayliegh Choate & TJR Stinson Blue Earn International Finals Rodeo Championship

By Tanya Randall

Bayliegh Choate and her great horse TJR Stinson Blue (“Boozer”) made the most of their first appearance at the 55th Annual International Finals Rodeo, held January 16-19 in the Lazy E Arena in Guthrie, Oklahoma. She and the 8-year-old roan gelding took home a $17,593 IFR Championship.

“He’s always a good boy,” the Cleveland, Tennessee, barrel racer said of the horse that qualified her for the 2022 National Finals Rodeo as a 5-year-old.

Choate and Boozer had to battle unfavorable draw positions and had to come from behind to outrun the IPRA Rookie Champion Brandi Inman and her Paint horse Rodeo Short Go, who held the aggregate lead until the last round.

“I drew bottom of the ground three of the four nights,” Choate explained. “The first night he ran in there really hard, and he won it, but it wasn’t super smooth like he can be. He’s usually smooth as butter.”

Knowing that Eddie Stinson, Pat Cowan gelding typically gets faster with each run, Choate had high expectations for the second round even though she had a bottom draw again.

“Well, the second night, he decided he was going to go faster and took off for the first barrel and busted his rear end,” said Choate of Boozer’s fall at the first barrel. “He stood up and ran across the pen. He placed fourth, which is absolutely shocking with the way that he fell. Any other horse would have pancaked on their side. I don’t even know how he did it—the video is crazy to watch—he stands up and still runs fourth.”

With the frigid temperatures preventing Choate from sweating Boozer’s legs, she opted for an extra-long Acuscope treatment to help him recover for his next run. Although better than their second run, their post-fall run was a little cautious.

“It kind of killed his confidence,” Choate said of the fall in the second round, “so the next night he really didn’t fire but still made a good run and placed.”

Choate finally got a better draw position for the last round.

“Finally, round four, I drew second out on the ground,” she said. “I kept telling him, ‘Ok, you’re second on the ground; it’s going to hold you!’ I was praying that God would give him the confidence to make the run that I knew he was capable of. He made such a pretty run. It was special.”

Choate’s IFR victory bumped her from 15th to fifth in the World Standings with $34,355. Of that total, $10,000 came from the World Champion Rodeo Alliance’s Rodeo Corpus Christi, which she won in 2024.

“I barely made it!” she said. I really didn’t have to haul that hard just because I got such a good kick start with winning Corpus. I had to get my rodeo count in, so I went to those 12 rodeos. I might have went to 13 or 14. I remember going to one more at the very end.”

While she loves the bigger rodeos, Choate’s not a fan of making the endless smaller rodeos to qualify for them.

“I love the big rodeos,” she said. “I love the high pressure situations. I thrive on that, but I don’t like driving to all the little rodeos to get to the big stuff.”

Her NFR run in 2022 gave her a different perspective on rodeo life.

“The year I made it to the NFR, I didn’t even have a horse by the end of it,” she said. “They were tired and over it just as much as I was. Boozer loves to rodeo, but I also want to keep him loving it. He also likes running through his field acting like a feral mustang. So, I try to balance it for him.”

Choate is hoping she can take a similar path to the IFR by doing well at the WCRA’s Women’s Rodeo World Championship to get TRAINING/CONDITIONING REGIMEN: “He just gets long trotted. He loves to live like a wild mustang. He doesn’t like to be in a stall and loves to be turned out. He has a big field all to himself. He does have a pasture mate, my 3-year-old Kevin. He’s also my pony horse that I used to pony him in because he likes to have that moral support. I just long trotted through the field and he stays tuned. I don’t ever work the barrels. Until this weekend, he’d been around the barrels three times since September, October. He’s easy.”

SPONSORS: Josh Andrews, Outlaw Equine, Core Nutrition

THANKS: “I just want to thank God. When I was sitting 15th—I was sitting 15th for like a month—I prayed, ‘If it’s Your will and You want me there, I’ll be there. If You don’t, I’ll accept that.’ I quit going to rodeos and just focused on my 3-year-old. I barely made it. After Boozer fell, I just prayed he’d give Boozer confidence and the strength to make one more run like we know he can. It just seems like He’s always blessing me, and He’s given me this platform. I want to glorify Him on it.”

another boost to her rodeo earnings.

“I’m not going to run my wheels off and go to 40 rodeos,” she reiterated. “It’s not fair to my horses. I never want to burn them out and over use them or over run them.”

Rundown Recap – Tie Downs & Bonnets, Oh My!

By Tanya Randall

Reprinted from the April 7, 2020 Issue

WPRM World Champion DM Sissy Hayday used a loose leather tie-down. 2019 futurity sensation Epic Guy wears a bonnet. RFD-TV's The American champion Cautro Fame is free headed.

We're not sure when, where or why it really started, but the use of head gear—tie-downs and bonnets—gets such a stigma in the general barrel racing population. Yet, at the highest levels, those making a living horseback, for the most, part view them as aids rather than short-cuts or band-aids for poor training.

Barrel Racing Report visited with Jolene Montgomery, Kassie Mowry and Brett Monroe to learn how they use various headgear to create winning horses.

Kassie Mowry

While leading futurity trainer and rider Kassie Mowry has won using tie-downs, her preference is toward bonnets.

"It's a feel thing really," said the two-time NFR qualifier from Dublin, Texas. "I like the way a bonnet feels a lot more. My horses will go to a barrel and pick their front end up—it's not something that's super noticeable—but that's what I want. I want their front end up and their butt in the ground. Sometimes when I want the front end to come up, naturally the head comes up with it. I don't want the head to come up too high."

With a background in English riding and eventing, Mowry explains the bonnet allows her to get the same feel as riding a jumper in a running martingale but is more stable for the sharp turns of our discipline.

"We can't run barrels in a martingale, but it's the same thing," she explained. "My horses go into a barrel like a jumper goes into a jump. They are elevated, but they can be too elevated with their headset and not be able to pull the turn off on the back side if they get too high.

"I also ride with a lot less bridle than most, so I feel like they'll have balance from that. It just helps keep them together. To me, the bonnet helps establish that consistent frame that I want them to be in. They're light, balanced and hold together in their turns."

Mowry has also used different placements of her bonnets to achieve specific feels. For example, her top three futurity horses all ran in bonnets last year. Epic Guy wore his in the traditional placement divots (supraorbital fossa) above the eyes, while Famous Ladies Man and CP He Will Be Epic wore higher placed bonnets more around their ears.

"We adjust them differently for the different headsets that we want—if you want your horse to put their nose out more or keep their heads in," she explained. "Last year when we ran Epic Guy, his bonnet sits right above his eyebrows (in the divot). It's low and that's because he tends to get low in his turns and wants to push his head out. He's too high-headed for a tiedown. It locked him up in the turns and he wasn't as quick. The bonnet down lower on his eyes kept him more balanced.

"If you look at Famous Ladies Man, he wears a bonnet and half-time you can't even see it because his browband hides it. It basically sits right around his ears. That's because when he finishes his turns, he brings his poll back toward me. Both are bonnets but they do two different things.

"CP He Will Be Epic ran in the same bonnet, the one that went around his ears, and without it, he was a hardly barrel horse!"

People might disagree about Mowry's use and placement of the bonnet, but as long as it works for her, she'll continue to do it.

The only horse that Mowry successfully ran in a tiedown was her 2016 NFR mount, Firewatermakemehappy.

"Without a tiedown, it would be a lot of work and tuning to keep him turning as quickly as he does with one," she said. "To save his body and his brain, I put one on him."

"Saving" her horses and keeping their training and competition experiences is largely the reason Mowry will use a bonnet. She says she can generally feel when a horse is loping circles or when they start progressing beyond a slow lope in the pattern if they're going to need one to help keep them in frame.

"For the most part, we'll put one on when they're going through faster than a lope but not quite a run," she said. "Even when we start doing smaller circles on some of them, you can tell they kind of get in the habit of elevating and hollowing their back out when you're wanting them to learn how to really drive underneath themselves. It just helps keep them from getting uncollected so they're learning the pattern.

"If I don't have one on and they get strung out, it will take them a good three or four strides to get them collected back up in my hands and by then they're not even focused on the turn. You've let too much time go by for the correction. If I can keep it from happening, I feel like they stay hooked and it's easier for them rather than letting them fall out of place and putting them back in. It just keeps them from getting out of position in the first place.

"I think they learn from positive reinforcement—doing it the correct way—rather than letting them fail and then fix it. It makes it less work—it's easier on them and their bodies earlier on. That's why I do it sooner rather than later. I feel like they'll allow it early on too than when they're running through the pattern. You slap one on them and they're not used to it, sometimes they're resist it more and aren't as forgiving of it."

Mowry likes her bonnets fairly loose as she doesn't want to hold their heads down with it. When she first introduces it to a horse, she'll back them up with the bridle reins while on the ground, which allows to horse to bump against the bonnet and learn how to give to it.

"I would never just step up on one that hasn't learned how to get off it," she said. "I kind of know my colts by the time I put one on. They're supple and know how to give to pressure so it's not as much of a big deal. For someone that rides their horses on a looser rein and not gathered up as much, I feel that horse might fight it or be more scared of it than one that we started a little more up in the bridle, used to giving to pressure. Those you can put in the roundpen and work them in it to get them used to it before stepping on."

Mowry says the bonnets and tie-downs even should be thought of as aids—training wheels—for horses.

"To me, it helps them learn without having to be so hard on them," she says. "I can probably train without one but then it would be a lot more of letting them fall on their face and fixing it. I rather not go through a lot of that. I don't want to have to be fixing a lot of stuff. I don't want them to get sore. I don't want them to get upset. I don't want to be getting after them if there is something – like a bonnet – that I can just put on to help them understand what I want. I want to help them and succeed and be confident and not having say you're wrong, you're wrong, you're wrong. I tell people it's the same as training wheels on a bike. You can learn to ride without them, but you're going to bust your body up doing it. Why not just put training wheels on for a while and learn to balance correctly?"

"I think they learn from positive reinforcement—doing it the correct way—rather than letting them fail and then fix it."

Kassie Mowry

While some horses may need them throughout their career, others only need them for a short time.

"I had one that I ran in a bonnet his futurity year and I just got back on him this year and he doesn't need it anymore," she said. "He just matured. I feel a lot of the colts when they're immature, they're really noodle-ly feeling until they grow and widen up through their frontend and neck. It helps keep them together more."

Brett Monroe

Recent HHA Futurity Champion Rider Brett Monroe has successfully used both bonnets and tiedowns throughout his career.

Choosing between a bonnet or a tiedown often depends on a rider's preference and the horse's conformation, says Monroe.

"Some horses have a natural way of traveling and don't need anything," he said. "Some horses may have their neck tie in a little higher and may need a tiedown. I've had some horses that you could have run free-headed that I used a loose tiedown just in case I got in bind and needed to handle them. With the tiedown, they can't just stick their nose in the air and get away from you."

"It just depends on the horse and what they're doing."

Monroe says the horses that tend to be too stiff in a tiedown, he'll often end up using a bonnet.

"I've had some that I've used both on—a tiedown and a bonnet at different times," he said. His Southern Rebel Futurity Champion Shot Of Firewater won the title in a bonnet, but the gelding has also won futurity money with a tiedown.

His HHA Futurity Champion Frisky Ta Fame won some of her first futurity money with Jamie Hodges with a bonnet, but Monroe switched her to a tiedown.

"She'd run the barrels in either one," he said. "I didn't like when you'd get her shoulder, she'd stick her nose straight out and try to take it away from you a little bit. The tiedown kept her from sticking her nose out and you could hold her shoulder up a little more when you schooled her. With the bonnet, she'd stick her nose out and flatten out when schooled her to pick her shoulder up."

He added that's one of the downsides to a bonnet.

"Sometimes a bonnet will make a horse drop a little bit more," he said. "They'll go to raise up and the pressure may make the drop their shoulder a little more."

When trying a bonnet or a tiedown for the first time, Monroe suggested starting out with them loose and gradually working it tighter as they get used to it, adding the roundpen is also a great place for a horse to get used to one before riding with it.

"Some horses with a tiedown or bonnet will run backwards or rear up when they feel that pressure," he said. "You start with it loose and in the roundpen letting them get used to it before they get on."

Monroe also advised barrel racers to ride with the tiedown or bonnet a few days to let the horse get the feel for it before tightening it or deciding on a different option. They have to learn how to go in them just as they would a bit for the first time.

"If you start a colt with one and get them to respect it, you can ride with it looser and they won't push or brace on it much," he added. "The bonnet is the same way, once they get to respecting it, you can just have it on loose. I actually start them in wire (tiedowns or bonnets) and let them learn how to back off it. Once they know it's there, they tend not to raise up and put that much pressure on it and you can leave it looser or go to nylon or whatever."

Jolene Montgomery

Recent OKC Rookie Champion Jolene Montgomery has also won with tiedowns, bonnets and sans head gear.

"We usually start out with the colts free headed," she explained. "I think a lot of people like them that way is because you do get a lot more lateral flexion. They need to be pretty broke to use either (a tiedown or a bonnet) because they usually fight it a little in the beginning."

Montgomery tends to use tiedowns more than bonnets, but not for the traditional thought of holding a horse's head down.

"A tiedown is obvious if they're throwing their noses up, but a lot of times, that's not even what I use it for," she explained. "I use a tiedown more for rate. If you bump them and they throw their head up a little and bump the tiedown next, you get double rate. I'm not very good rating one on my own. They either need to be doing it on their own or I have a tiedown to help. Those horses get to running and stretched out, so a lot of times when you see my using a tiedown, it's not to keep their head down; it's to keep it in."

Montgomery will use a bonnet on a horse that tends to have a higher head set.

"They come out high from the wither," she said. "Those are horses that tend to stall out and get their heads up too high out of a barrel and lose their forward motion. The bonnet will keep their head and neck down but let them stretch their nose out so they don't have the fight there."

Even though Montgomery has some of the most educated horses at the barrel race, she'll still introduce a tiedown or bonnet carefully.

"I put them on them loose at first and I'll either go to the roundpen or lunge them with it first," she said. "Some of them do take offense. I try to leave them loose for the first day or two and try not to offend them too much."

Montgomery also advised to give a horse time to learn how to work in either a bonnet or tiedown.

"My stud I put a bonnet on him early and I didn't give him enough time before I took it off and began trying other things," she said of her HHA Futurity Reserve Champion Famous Sierra. "I ultimately ended up riding him in a bonnet. I didn't give him enough time to get use to it. It took him like a month. He didn't like it at first."

HEADIN' FOR HOME

by Sherry Morrison // Triple M (Mike Morrison Ministries)

I looked up the definition of "frustrated" to see what the dictionary said it meant. I could write down what it feels like to me, because in the last few weeks, frustration has been camped on my doorstep. It means, "being upset or annoyed BECAUSE OF THE INABILITY TO CHANGE OR ACHIEVE SOMETHING".

Yep. That's been me. So, then I looked up what the Bible had to say about it. It's very close to anger. I learned to be: slow to wrath, slow to anger, to overlook a transgression and not to give place to the devil. James 1:19-20, Prov. 19-11, Eph. 4:26-27 and Prov. 14:19.

I'm familiar with I Pet. 5:7 that instructs us to cast our care on Him. But even when I throw all 100 plus pounds of myself on Him, I'm reaching to take back what I tried to leave with Him. How silly is that? Dumb. Double dumb. I need to work on this.

It's a new year. Might as well get started!
